

Dear Kate Beckinsale,

I read your letter and I identified the problem. I actually think that you are sad because of your boyfriend's head size. Your friends should not laugh about this. We are what God made of us. They probably never tried to go out with a conehead. Maybe they would realise that it has a lot of advantages, like nearest parking spaces at stores. You should suggest them to try one.

If your friends are really good friends, they will not laugh about the guy you love. They should be happy for you. Also, you have to discover if you love him enough to overcome what people think about your love. If so, well you should have enough strength to do so. If not, maybe you should have a discussion with your boyfriend and see what is the best choice for your future. You should not do what others want you to do.

I hope you will make a good choice that will bring you happiness.

Yours truly,

Deidre
