

My Homosexuality

Oh dear... Since I am sixteen, I am asking myself questions. Instead of being attracted by the girls, it is by the boys. It has been hard for me to accept my condition.

Everyday, I told myself: "Well, this girl is not so bad. I should talk to her." So one day I took my courage in both hands and did it. When she realized that I was trying to seduce her, she stopped me and said "Sorry, I am gay." Ouch. I was paralyzed. How could she accept her homosexuality like that? I decided to let it go.

One day, a girl came to me. Her name was Sarah. She wanted to go out and have dinner on Friday evening. I thought about it during the week and decided to tell her that I would like to. After school, she came home with me and we left with my car. Once at the restaurant, we talked about a lot of things. I had fun with her. Then, we left the restaurant and went to walk the streets. Suddenly, she tried to kiss me. Ewww... I was not prepared for that. Well, I think that I will never be ready for that with a girl. It was at that moment that I woke up. I realized that I could not fight my sexual orientation. I pushed her gently and said "Hmm, I am sorry but I am not ready to get into a relationship." At the beginning, she was offended but she respected my decision.

Now that I accept my homosexuality, I don't know how to tell the others. I am afraid of how people will act with me after I will have told them. I hope that my friends' and my parents' reactions will be good. Can you give me advice? It would help me a lot!
