

Panic at the Mall

Lili Tompkins, October 22nd 2009

Ahhh! I don't know what to do! My son lived a moment 3 years ago that have marked him forever. Every night, he has nightmares. Me and my husband are always tired because of that. To help you to understand what I'm talking about, I will tell you the whole story:

On December 2nd 2006, Toby Burn's, my son, was trying clothes at Sports Expert when a group of terrorists entered in the mall with one goal: kill people! The assailants looked just like the typical terrorist: long white clothes, turban and big guns! Toby didn't realize what was happening, but when he saw a girl die in his face, he was shocked! His heart started to beat really fast.

Then, he calmed down and stayed cool as a cucumber. He began to think at what he could do. He saw a plan of the building on a wall. There was an emergency exit near the store where he was stocked. So, he slowly crawled to the exit door of the store. When he tried to open it, he saw two snipers with AK-47 right upstairs! No way he could get out by this way.

His hands were shaking. Suddenly, he heard someone who was coming in the Sports Expert. Toby ran in the back store to hide. The strangers entered in the store. There were five terrorists, searching for survivors. At that moment, Toby saw a trap in the ceiling! He reached it with a ladder. A terrorist heard him and shot him through the roof. Toby received a bullet in the foot!

``OUCH``! He saw another ladder, which was leading to the rooftop. When he arrived on the top, there were a lot of S.W.A.T agents. It was over! Today, he is lucky to be alive.

He is alive, but his life isn't normal. I tried everything: psychologist, medicaments, and so on... You are my last chance. Please, can you give me back my son's life?
